DEMOCRATS WIN IN BIG LANDSLIDE

PNEUMONIA IS FATAL TO AGED MOKENA MAN

John Erickson, aged 80 years, who has been a resident of Mokena for many years, died in his home Friday morning October 30 after a brief illness of pneumonia.

Mr. Erickson was born on June 19, 1856 in Sweden. In 1880 he came to America and settled in Mokena where he had made his home ever since.

On October 30, 1882 he was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Larson. To this union were born six children, two of whom died in infancy. His wife preceded him in death in 1924.

Funeral services were held from the late home Sunday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock to the St. John Evangelical church with the pastor, Rev. Theodore Haelele officiating. Burial took place in St. John cemetery.

Mr. Erickson was a man of kindly disposition and well respected by all.

His passing away is mourned by two sons: Charles of Mokena and Elmer of Frankfort; two daughters, Mrs. Mable Benson who with her husband, made her home with her father, and Mrs. Helen Knudson; seven grandchildren and many other relatives and friends.

White Store Holding Big Remodeling Sale

J. J. Cohen, owner of the popular White Store in Joliet, has had such a good increase in business that it has created a need for more selling space and has had considerable remodeling work done. With the establishment of the upper floor of the building for merchandising, the store now has four selling floors.

Soon to celebrate the 17th anniversary, the store has had rapid growth, Mr. Cohen said, surviving a severe depression and maintaining its progress thruout. He stated that he was convinced that Joliet was again approaching conditions of prosperity and that the upturn in business had prompted him to enlarge the store.

He says he believes that the move was in keeping with the times, and would enable him to give employment to more persons in the store, in addition to the mechanics who do the remodeling.

In order to dispose of $75,000 worth of seasonal merchandise and to make room for more selling space and new stock, a remodeling sale is now in progress at the White Store and continues for the next 18 days.

Change Made In Mokena Motor Sales Management

The management of the Mokena Motor Sales has been changed the past week. George Koeller, Jr., who has been associated with Wallace Weichbrodt in the management of this garage has sold out his interest in the business to Mr. Weichbrodt who will be in sole charge now. Louis Atterberry who has been connected with this garage as salesman has left this garage.

Auto Thieves Return Stolen Car

Automobile thieves have been visiting Mokena the past week. Last Friday the lock was torn from the garage door of the James Egerton place in Mokena and after the thieves got through using the car they ran it back into the garage. Mr. Egerton had put five gallons of gas in the car tank before locking the garage. Next morning the gauge showed that over four and a half gallons of the gas had been used. This was a rather extraordinary case as it is seldom that a stolen car is returned to its owner by the thief or thieves.

Wednesday night Bristol Lauffer had parked his Buick car near the Mokena public school while he and his mother attended a band meeting. When they left the school at the close of the meeting they could not find their car. The theft was reported to George Bennett, local deputy and after a search of many hours he found the car abandoned near the Mokena Oil Co., property in the east end of the village. Mr. Bennett took the car back to Mr. Lauffer who, after examining the speedometer said it showed the car had been driven about 65 miles from the time he had left it parked near the school until it was returned to him.

No trace has been found of the thief or thieves, although a number of suspicious angles of the case are under investigation with the hope of obtaining a clue.

Will Change Time

Eastern Standard Time having been voted out by the voters of Chicago, Cook County and Chicago will go back on Central Standard Time on November 15th. Daylight Saving Time will be retained however and will be in effect from April to September of each year.

Will Carry Complete Tabulation In Our Next Week's Issue

The next issue of this paper will contain a complete summary of results of the November 3rd general election.

This tabulation is especially timely, since it provides the grand climax to America's straw poll mania, to the claims and counter claims that were hurled back and forth during the campaign, and to the endless conjecture regarding Republican strength in California, for instance against Democratic strength in Massachusetts.

It is the final answer...the real poll to end all polls! We suggest that you save it for later reference.

V. F. W. Post To Install Officers

They voted to sponsor a band concert by the Frankfort school band the 3rd week in November, the date to be announced later. The newly organized Mokena band is to play several selections on this concert.

Mr. Wiswell paid for all the tickets issued to the band members who deeply appreciate the courtesy which enabled them to attend this annual fall concert of the Joliet High School band.

REV. DECKINGER DIES FOLLOWING PNEUMONIA

The Rev. George Deckinger, aged 85 years, died Tuesday morning at 7 o'clock at his home in Mokena following a brief illness.

He was born March 11, 1851 in Stammheim beim Kalw, Germany.

Rev. Deckinger was confirmed by his father in the church at Stammheim in which the latter had served as minister for 25 years. It was pre-ordained that the young George should follow in the footsteps of his father and after the completion of his University and Seminary course, the young man was ordained to the ministry and served two years in Germany. A desire to try his fortune in America led Rev. Deckinger to bid farewell to the fatherland in 1875 and to sorrowfully leave his parents.

The young man's first post of duty in the new world was at Ann Arbor and Clarenceville, Michigan. In 1876 Rev. Deckinger was married to Miss Caroline Fisher of Wayne, Michigan, the Rev. Klingman of Ann Arbor officiating at the ceremony. To this union there were born four daughters, one of whom died in infancy.

Rev. Deckinger was active in the continuous service of his Master for almost 60 years. After serving in the Lutheran Synod until 1893, Rev. Deckinger joined the Evangelical Synod in 1897 and was a member thereof at the date of his death. In March, 1934, after having served congregations in Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas and Nebraska, Rev. Deckinger, at the age of 83 years resigned from active service in Okawville, Illinois, and removed to Mokena, Ill., on May 1, 1934 where he lived in retirement and peace until his death last Tuesday.

Rev. Deckinger leaves to mourn his death the beloved wife who continued to stand faithfully at his side throughout all the joys and sorrows of a long life. On August 15th, 1926 the couple was privileged to celebrate their Golden Anniversary at Haniel, Illinois.

The mourning daughters who mourn the loss of a beloved and respected father are: Mrs. Ray Lincoln of Detroit, Mich., Mrs. Christensen of Chicago, Ill., and Mrs. Carl Goranson of Monee, Ill., and one foster-daughter Mrs. Paul Kam-in of Carleton, Michigan.

The surviving grandchildren are: Theodore E. Lapp, of Ann Arbor, Mich., formerly minister at St. John's Evangelical church of Mokena, and his sister Mrs. Vladimir Bibicoff of Wayne, Michigan, Stanley Lincoln and his sister Mrs. Alphonse White both of Dearborn, Michigan and Melvin Goranson, Wilbur Goranson and Ramon Goranson all of Monee, Ill.

There is one great grandchild surviving: Stanley Lincoln, Jr., of Dearborn, Michigan.

The funeral will be held Saturday, Nov. 7, 1936 at 2 p. m. in St. John's Evangelical church. Dr. Carl Bauer, professor of Elmhurst College, Elmhurst, Ill., will deliver the funeral sermon. Rev. H. E. Koenig will represent the North Illinois District of which Rev. Deckinger was a minister. Ministers of the Monee Region will act as pallbearers. He will be laid to rest in St. John's cemetery.

To all who learned to know Rev. Deckinger he was a living incarnation of the beauty and simplicity of the true Christian character. Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou has been faithful over the few. Enter into thine eternal reward.

Training in Simplicity

Let us bring up our children simply, I had almost said rudely. Let us entice them to exercise that gives them endurance, even to privations. Let them belong to those who are better trained to fatigue and the earth for a bed than is the comfort of the table and couches of luxury.

So we shall make men of them, independent and staunch, who may be counted on, who will not sell themselves for pottage, and who will have withal the faculty of being happy.

"Always blows the wrong way for me. I don't mind losing the timber. If it had caught him, I'd—" He checked himself suddenly. "Look here," he jerked, "why can't we help the wind along next night there's a blow—just give things a start down there?"

"What'd you mean? Burn him out?"

"Why not?"

McCrosen took the cigarette from his mouth but said nothing.

"Well?" sputtered Van Tambel.

"Why don't you talk?"

"I don't fancy that kind of a job."

McCrosen shifted moodily in his saddle. "Bill Denison and I have got our differences—plenty of 'em. Some day I expect to iron 'em out with him. But it'll be done in daylight."

Van Tambel sneered. "Look out he don't get you and the girl both."

"He's welcome to, if the luck's his. Well—the words came reluctantly—

"I'll talk to Barney Rebstock. You'll have to pay him well."

After Van Tambel came back from the hospital, he reopened his office in Sleepy Cat.

"I thought you said the old devil couldn't get well," complained Pardaloe to Dr. Carpy.

Carpy was laconic. "He can't. Some day he'll crack up sudden."

But Van Tambel kept Jane so closely under his eye that she had no chance to see Denison.

One day her father took her in town on business. The volunteer fire fighters were clamoring for their pay, and Jane, knowing the details of the agreement with Pardaloe as to how much beer and "grub" should be provided, plus their pay, rode with her father, to town, to settle with Pardaloe.

"Bill," she said to Pardaloe, when the accounts had been straightened out, "I want to ask a question and I want the truth."

Pardaloe looked at her with shrewd benevolence. "Fire away, girl!"

"Why does my father hate Bill Denison so?"

Pardaloe shifted uneasily. "You won't like the truth, Miss Jane."

"Whether I like it or not, I want you to tell me, Bill," she said.

"Well, your dad wants the Spring ranch—started a fight for it at the Medicine Bend land office. Bill beat him there, so he goes up to Washington, and Bill has to sell off his cows to get money to fight and pay lawyers. 'Fore he got through, the boy had to sell everything but his shirt to keep his end up. Kind of tough."

"It was tough," assented Jane grimly. Her eyes were half closed and her lips compressed, as if to shout out unpleasant details.

Pardaloe warmed to his story. "If it wa'n't you, Miss Jane, an' your own dad, I'd call a man that'd act that way—well, wonder to me is, Bill never plugged him. Now don't cry; I told you you wouldn't like it."

Jane shook her head and brushed the tears from her eyes with a gesture of defiance. "Don't mind a little shower, Bill. You've told me what I asked for—the truth. Now I want to tell you something. But please keep my secret—will you, Bill?"

Pardaloe's huge, honest bulk, slow-moving jaws, and deep piercing eyes invited confidence. Jane had no difficulty in reposing in the lanky ex-sheriff. "Shoot," was all he said.

Swiftly she told him of her first meetings with Denison, and of their rides together. She described how he had saved her life and how afterward her father had ridden over to the Denison ranch with Dave McCrosen, created a scene and forbade her ever again to see Denison.

"I'm watched now like a two-year-old child," she concluded, "and I'm rebellious!"

Pardaloe looked at her appraisingly. He observed the animation of her manner and the flash of her eye; he listened to the rapid flow of her words and the spirited way in which she spoke them. The old frontiersman looked at her as an artist might look on a flower; he could see, but couldn't quite understand, all that was hidden within it.

"I wish," said Jane, musing, almost as much to herself as to Pardaloe, "I knew just what to do."

"Do nothin'," suggest Pardaloe.

Jane bridled. "Do nothing! That isn't very pleasant to think about."

"You've got to realize your circumstances," he returned. "In the mess you're in all around out there, it's best for you to sit tight 'n' do nothin'."

You don't know it, but you're settin' on a box of dynamite. You've got three men out there, all three desperate quick on the trigger. And it wouldn't take much to start airy one into action. There's your dad, McCrosen, and Bill Denison. If anythin' begins with three men like that, it won't stop till there's harm done."

"Do you expect me to act as peace-maker, Bill?"

"I didn't say that—'twouldn't be no sort of use. There'll be peace there when bobcats go back on jack rabbits."

"Well," sighed Jane, reluctant, "you know best, Mr. Pardaloe—"

"Bill."

"You know best, Bill. I may want to talk to you again."

"Any time, honey."

Riding home with her father, who rode slowly, she had plenty of time to think. And her thoughts were sobered.

McCrosen was a thorn in her side. To meet him every day and be half-way pleasant was a daily strain.

He tried to make up to her. "I got off on the wrong foot with you, Jane," he said one day. The two were standing near the ranch-house door, in the sunshine. "I know that, all right. All I can say is, if there's anythin' I can do to square myself, I'm ready to do it whenever you say the word. Is that fair?"

Jane was looking up at the mountains. She answered without rancor; a mild manner must be her cue now.

A week passed. Van Tambel lay in bed. He had to send Jane to Medicine Bend to attend to some bank business there. To keep her under surveillance, Van Tambel ordered McCrosen to ride to Sleepy Cat with her. When Jane heard of the arrangements she flatly refused to go.

"What's a-matter with you, you damned cantankerous thing!" demanded her father huskily. "Ain't my foreman good enough for you to ride with?"

Jane's features set. "I won't ride with him," she declared crisply.

"Why not?" thundered her father, rising up in bed. "Oh!" he exclaimed, swearing violently, at a sudden twinge of pain. "Why won't you ride with him, you hussy?"

Jane drew herself up the least bit. Her father's rudeness stiffened her attitude. "If you want to know the real reason, I don't want him trying to kiss me on the way home after he's had too many drinks in the Red Front saloon. I won't ride with him. If he goes, I don't."

Finally Bill Page was assigned to escort the wayward Jane, and the two set off for town. Jane was most interested to get some news from Bill Page about Denison; but Bill had neither seen nor heard of him since the Gunlock Knob fire.

In Medicine Bend, Jane extended a note, drew some money, paid the hospital bills, and waited for the afternoon train home. When she got to Sleepy Cat it was ten o'clock at night, and no rig was at the station from the ranch. She was compelled to spend the night at the hotel. It was a long time afterward before she realized that the whole trip had been planned by her father and McCrosen for a purpose.

She rose early, breakfasted alone, and started out to pay the few remaining fire bills. She went first to Spott's place to pay for the beer. Spotts was out. "Ought to be back pretty soon," said Oscar. "He's got to be here pretty soon to let the bartender out for breakfast."

"I've an order to leave at Rubido's," said Jane. "I'll be back." She walked over to the general store, left her provision order for the wagon to pick up, and returned to Spott's barber shop. Jake, his crutches at his side, was sitting in his barber chair.

"Hello there, Miss! Well! How's things out at Gunlock?"

"About as usual, Jake. I've come to pay for the beer."

"No more fire botherin'?"

"Not at present. How much was the beer?"

"No hurry about that."

"Yes, but I want to clean it up."

"Thank you, ma'am," said the saloon keeper and barber as Jane counted out and handed him the money. "If I could only call my old side pardner back out of it,—Spotts shook his head—"I wouldn't mind if I never got a durned cent for the beer."

"None of us will ever forget Panama, Jake."

"The damndest, meanest, orniest fires that ever swept them hills," said Spotts, counting over the money perfectly. "Done more damage to the range—not to speak of losin' the best man we had in Sleepy Cat and crippin' up the best man we had in the hills."

"Who was that, Jake?"

"Why, Bill Denison."

Jane started visibly. "Bill Denison?" she echoed in consternation. "What do you mean?"

"Well, you know he's in the hospital."

"I know nothing of the kind," exclaimed Jane sharply. She stood white as a sheet. "What has happened? Tell me!"

"Why, didn't you know his eyes is gone to hell?"

"What do you mean? What has happened? Tell me!"

Spotts started violently out of his torpor as he saw with amazement the effect of his news on his visitor. "Why, Carpy says his eyes got burned some gettin' through that Gunlock Knob fire. Then some son—" Jake checked himself. "Somebody set his ranch house afire last night and nearly burned him up. Ask Carpy; he'll tell you."

She hurried to the hotel. The doctor was out on a call. Jane hurried to McAlpin's barn, where she had left her pony, and rode straight up the hill to the hospital.

CHAPTER IX

"Where is he, Sister?"

"His room is on the second floor—218. Shall I show you the way?"

"If you please, Sister. I learned only a moment ago that he was here. I've heard of this dreadful ranch-house fire only this minute. Did he tell you how it happened, Sister?"

"He has hardly spoken since they brought him in. But Mr. Scott said it was getting out of the burning ranch house."

"How could that have happened? His eyes were scorched in saving me, Sister, from getting burned to death on Gunlock Knob."

"Oh, my dear."

"You don't know what terrible fires we've been having down our way."

"They've been terrible everywhere this fall."

"Do you think there is any chance to save his sight? Oh, Sister, can you imagine how I feel?"

"Dear heart, I do know how you feel. Of course I don't know a thing about the case, except that Dr. Carpy has given very strict orders about his care."

She was too considerate to tell how worried she knew Carpy to be. "Of course his room is dark. And his eyes are bandaged. We like Mr. Denison so much—he's always been so kind to us with nice gifts. This is his room." The nurse laid her hand on the knob of the door. "Shall I go in with you?"

"Do, Sister," said Jane.

Sister opened the door. "Good-morning, Mr. Denison."

"Good-morning, Sister."

Jane, walking in on tiptoe behind her guide, heard his answer.

"Who's that with you, Sister?" Jane had stepped as lightly as possible; but his ears had detected her footsteps.

"I've brought you a visitor. I hope you're not cross," she added, banteringly.

"Who is visiting me?" he asked.

Jane had been gradually drawing closer to him. "Bill?"

He started violently. For an instant he was silent as if listening for more. Then he responded, low and strangely, "Jane?"

"Yes, Bill."

In the dark, her hand touched his arm. He caught both her hands, crushing them within his own, and drew one and the other hungrily to his lips.

"Sister," he said, composed, yet eager, "can you find a chair, in the dark, for Miss Van Tambel?"

With the nurse gliding out of the room, Jane's hands crept over his shoulders, around his neck, and as his arms enfolded her, their lips met to give and to receive that for which words were not needed.

"I didn't want you to hear that I was in trouble till we knew more about it. How did you find out I was here, Jane?"

"Jake Spotts, Bill. I never dreamed of such a thing," she said tremulously.

"He told me the ranch house was burned last night. Oh, Bill!"

"I think maybe my eyes will be all right in a couple of days. Ben Page has been working for me for a while. He got hold of Bob Scott to bring me in to see Doc Carpy—and the doctor sent me here." He felt her warm tears against his cheek. He kissed them away from her eyes. "Don't cry! There's nothing to cry over. I'll be all right when my eyes get better. Doctor says that won't be long. I wish you hadn't heard of it."

"I wish you'd never heard of me, Bill. To think of it, that I should have been the cause of starting all this trouble. Oh, why couldn't I have stayed home that dreadful day instead of riding into danger? I'll never, never forgive myself. And I'm ashamed to say it, Bill, but the real reason I rode up there was because I was just hungry for a sight of you—that was the real reason, Bill."

Denison only laughed. "Don't think you're the only one that was hungry for a sight. If I hadn't been scouting around the Knob trail where I knew you'd be, I'd never have caught sight of you. What then? Why, Jane, if you were burning in a fire, why shouldn't I jump in after you? What would be left for me?"

"Do your eyes hurt terribly, Bill?"

"Not when you're here, Jane."

"Oh, I know better. I know they do. And I can do nothing to help!"

He made light of her worry. There were more furtive tears, more earnest prayers, more submission from Jane. More happy laughs, more ardent embraces, more carefree cheer from Denison.

"Why, Bill," she protested at length, "one would think there was nothing the matter with you. And I am frightened to death."

"I was frightened to death myself till you came. It's not much fun sitting alone here in the dark. What frightens me most is the thought that if the worst should come, I'd lose you."

"You can never lose me, Bill. Remember that."

"Yes, but a blind man!" he exclaimed desperately. "Jane, I never could ask you to marry me blind—"

"There's only one way to keep me from marrying that good-for-nothing Bill Denison—that's to kill me and make me into dust—even then, I'd tremble under his feet. I would—just to annoy him."

Her tongue was light and happy when she said good-by, but her heart was dread with fear. She rode straight to Carpy's office; luckily she found him in.

"Doctor! I'm so worried about Mr. Denison—"

"So am I."

"You know what happened?"

"Said he got trapped in the ranch-house fire."

"Yes, but it was trying to save my life when his eyes first got hurt."

"Never said a blamed word about that."

"I was up on Gunlock Knob, and he rode up to get me through the fire, Doctor," she asked, unsteadily, "can't you save his eyes?"

The old surgeon looked at her sympathetically. "You're asking a hard question, Jane? There are times when a doctor can't tell much better than an outsider how things are coming out. Bill's in bad shape; I must admit that. But I'm doing everything under the sun I can for him."

Uncle Phil Says:

Where He Wants to Be

A man generally shuns an invitation. Why? Simply because accepting, knocks him out of the dull, stupid rut he is always complaining of.

Strong, solid unbreakable friendship is the greatest thing in life. It's rare.

I slept, and dreamed that life was Beauty; I awoke, and found that life was Duty.

Can't Fool 'Em

Don't argue to young people that the world is all wrong. They know better.

Civilization as it develops, becomes more intellectual, but it must not forget to consult the human heart.

The dumb animals are the ones that live as wisely as they know how.

Little at a Time

Everything is to be accomplished bit by bit.

The man who has affection for you may be under an illusion, but, oh, let it never be dispelled.

Two perfectly useless complaints are of the weather and the fashions. Both are inexorable.

A word to the wise may be sufficient, but the wise frequently ask for further enlightenment.

Happiness is the bird on whose tail you have to put salt in order to capture it.

Two great talkers will not travel far together.

ets, collar, and cuffs. The contrasting yoke is unusually effective, the sleeves are full and graceful, and there is an air of sophistication about the design not often found in a garment so practical and useful. Send for size Small (bust 34-36), Medium (38-40), or Large (42-44). Size Medium requires four and one-half yards of 35 inch material.

Curse of Progress

Letting Them Know
Sandy joined a golf club, and was told by the professional that if his name was on his golfballs and they were lost they would be returned to him when found.
"Good," said the Scot, "put my name on this ball."
The pro did so.
"Would you also put M. D. after it?" said the new member. "I'm a doctor." The pro obeyed.
"There's just one more thing, can ye squeeze 'Hours 10 to 3' on as well?"—Bee Hive.

Masterful Man
They were walking along North Main street and paused in the glare of a brightly lighted jewelry store. Unlike her escort, she seemed in no hurry to continue.
"Look," she said, "did you ever see such good looking engagement rings for such a low price?"
He was the masterful type. Taking her arm firmly, he answered: "Uh-huh. But look over here! Isn't that a swell radio for only $11.95?"

Household Questions

A stick of wax and a brush of oil will do much to take the curse off furniture scratches. The wax will fill in the scars and the oil will darken the wax.

Candied ginger, diced and combined with chilled fruits makes a tasty cocktail.

When making bread and butter pudding, sprinkle each slice of bread with grated coconut instead of currants, and strew some on the top. This will make a change from the ordinary pudding and will be found very tasty.

To make chiffonade dressing mix one tablespoon chopped onion, two tablespoons chopped cooked beets, two tablespoons chopped sweet pickles and one hard-cooked egg, diced, to one-half cup of French dressing. This dressing is tasty to serve on head lettuce or diced vegetable salads.

Bits of leftover jelly are good used for stuffing baked fruits, topping baked or steamed pudding or spreading over chops or roasts just before serving.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

High Collars and Adams' Apples

BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.

The moot question of whether the east coast or the west coast is America's artistic center is one of the most mootful you ever encountered. Temporarily, though, it's being eclipsed by the burning issue touching on what the well-dressed man will wear around his goatee.

New York's tastiest dressers are encasing their necks within high linen walls—the highest since Jericho.
I hear—whereas Hollywood's defenders fight on for the raskish, not to say winsome,
open-throated effect—in other words, 'tis a war between the shut-tins and the fresh-air fends. Maybe you don't think this is important, but they do.

Today, typical champions of these clashing schools of thought met here face to face. Sunset boulevard's entry was unbuttoned so far down in front he practically was being served on the half-shell, and one and all had a fascinating view of his Adam's apple as it raced up and down, the same as a fox squirrel on a snag. Like a boy chinning himself on a board fence, Fifth avenue's challenger was hidden behind the tallest, stiffest, flaringest collar I ever beheld.

Kid Movie Actors Stampede

ACCORDING to honest estimates, exactly one child in 3,000,000 gets a chance to qualify as a child actor in the pictures—not an outstanding star, mind you, but just a reasonably successful juvenile performer.

These figures have been broadcast in a laudable effort to check the flood of hopeful parents who pour into Hollywood, seeking large salaries and fame for Junior or precocious little Doris, and finding, instead, only disappointment and heartbreak and finally despair and often destitution.

So I'm repeating the doleful warning. It won't do any good, grown-up vanity and greed and ambition being what they are.

Headaches From Economic Messiahs

ALBERTA, in Canada, produced an economic Messiah, a spouting John the Baptist of the dispensation, who came out of the wilderness with a lovely device called a "social credit system" which, among other pleasant things, guaranteed every adult in the land $25 a month for life.

So the voters overwhelmingly elected him as premier and from over the dominion flocked in thousands to share in the distribution. Now they're busted; the budget is a sieve; citizens are faced with ruinous taxes—and nobody yet has collected that twenty-five a month.

Industrial depression always spawns its self-anointed saviors who promise to restore prosperity by giving money they haven't got to people who haven't earned it. After a while, in spite of human folly, good times return.

Crystal Gazing in World Affairs

TODAY we have a few fresh-laid predictions by good old Doctor Cobb, palm-reading, crystal-gazing, numerology (during income tax week) and car washing.

France will save her face and Ethiopia will lose its pants.

The Rhineland, being German, will keep right on being German, as it should.

Although perhaps making some snoots at each other—for public consumption—behind the scenes Adolph H. and Benito M. will have many a hearty laugh together.

Several smaller nations will get painfully crushed in the jam, as usual.
England will positively not get crushed in any jam, also as usual.

Japan will discover the Chinese are responsible for the whole mess and grab off another slice of territory.

Gov. Hoffman Overlooks a Bet

IN THEIR efforts to impeach the prosecution's key witnesses, Governor Hoffman and the other attorneys for the defense in the Bruno Hauptman case are overlooking a bet.

There was one person who testified most damagingly against the cause to which they have devoted themselves.
Under oath, this person solemnly declared that, on a certain night, alongside a certain cemetery, he recognized the voice of the kidnaper, falsely bargaining for the return of a baby already murdered, as the voice of their client.

Farm to Market Road Program Goes Ahead

Greater progress has been made in the construction of farm to market roads since the beginning of the Roosevelt Administration than ever before. In the last three and a half years, under the supervision of the Bureau of Public Roads, of the United States Department of Agriculture, 18,078 miles of secondary or feeder roads have been completed; 4,616 miles are under construction, and projects for the construction of 866 miles have been approved, making a total of 23,560 miles. Congress has authorized the expenditure of $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years, 1938 and 1939, to carry on the work, Federal expenditures to be matched by the States.

In June of 1933, an appropriation of $400,000,000 was provided by Congress for a highway-construction program, and the Hayden-Cartwright Act of 1934 supplied another $200,000,000. One-fourth of both appropriations was apportioned for farm to market roads.
Those are in addition to roads built under supervision of the Bureau of Public Roads.

Construction of farm to market roads under these appropriations is under the supervision of the Works Progress Administration. When completed, more than 130,000 miles of all-weather rural roads will have been built. If added to this, roads constructed by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration and the Civil Works Administration the grand total would be nearly 400,000 miles, or about one-sixth of all the dirt roads in the country. The mileage of farm-to-market roads improved by WPA workers if laid in transcontinental highways would stretch nearly 44 times across the widest dimension of the United States, or five times around the world.

In addition to WPA's 12,000 secondary road projects, the Bureau of Public Roads has placed 200,000 emergency workers on a $500,000,000 highway and grade-crossing elimination program, let by contract through State Highway Departments.

THE CHILDREN

Mrs. Geo. Koeller Sr., entertain at dinner Sunday in honor of Mr.
Koeller's birthday. The guests were the children and their families which in all numbered fourteen.

This year Hallowe'en was the most quiet it has been in the history of Mokena, as not a thing was disturbed and no youngsters were out on the streets. The people of Mokena feel rather grateful to the young folks that they restrained from the usual deeds of mischief.

A movement is on foot to circulate a petition asking the village board to appoint George Bennett as policeman, water pumpen and general all-around man for the various village odd jobs.

Several water mains and hydrants around the village have sprung leaks and are being dug up for repairs this week.

The Catholic Woman's club met at the home of Mrs. J. Hochkins.

A marriage license was issued to Frank Walsh, son of Mr. and Mrs.
John Walsh of Mokena and Vera Emig, 22, of Chicago Heights at Chicago last Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Swanson of Chicago spent Sunday in the home of the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs.
Anton Benson.

Artists Ball To Be Held On Nov. 28

One of the most important of Chicago's annual social events—the Artists' Ball—will be held this year at the Drake hotel on the night of Saturday, November 28.

The roster of patrons of the ball reads like the social register. Indications are that the change in society attitude, so evident last year, will be even more pronounced this season.

Proceeds of the Artists' ball are to go to the school of the Art Institute. Last year society took over the event as its own. Indications are that the event will continue in this spirit and that it soon will be a worthy rival of the annual Beaux Arts Ball in New York.

Each year the ball here is based on some outstanding art exhibit, period, or work which has received more than ordinary attention during the year. This year the Vincent Van Gogh period was obvious as the one natural inspiration.

Decorations will be in charge of Shep Voglesang. These decorations as well as the costumes will be influenced by the vivid Van Goh yellows, blues and reds and portrait characters, such as the celebrated "Postman." Other artists of the Van Gogh period, such as Gauguin, Toulouse-Lautrec, Cezanne, and De-gas, also will have their influence over the costumes and decorations.

A highlight of the ball will be the personal appearance, as guest of honor, of Irving Stone, the famous young author whose book, "Lust for Life," a biography of Van Gogh, had much to do with the popularity of the works of the Dutch painter.
Prizes for the best costumes will include Van Gogh prints and bound volumes of recent books on Van Gogh.

Tickets can be purchased at Marshall Fields, the Drake Hotel and the Art Institute.

25th Anniversary of Auto Self Starter To Be Observed

This year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the practical application of the electric self-starter to automobiles and plans are under way to take note of the event in New York in connection with the annual automobile shows in mid-November. Charles F. Kettering, now Vice-President of the General Motors Corporation in Charge of Research, developed the self starter in 1911, working with a loyal band of helpers under severe handicaps in the barn which served as the first "factory" and "executive offices" of the Dayton Engineering Laboratories Company.

The self-starter was applied first by Henry M. Leland to Cadillac cars and became standard Cadillac equipment in 1912. On the strength of this epochal improvement, Cadillac that year won the famous Dewar Trophy in London for the second time. Soon other makes of automobiles were so equipped and the rapid expansion of the automobile industry followed. The self-starting mechanism made motoring safer, easier and cleaner and, in particular, met the driving needs of women.

ARMISTICE DAY

Each day brings new headlines of another crisis in European affairs and momentarily word may be flashed that the nations of Europe are again at each other's throats. A definite break appears inevitable as the struggle between Communism, Fascism and Nazism, for control of the governments of Europe, continues with unabated fury. The traditional enmities that existed prior to 1914 are still very much alive and fanned to a greater pitch by the dictatorship ambitions of individual leaders.

Although America is protected, in a measure, by existing neutrality legislation against the dangers of becoming involved in a new European conflict, this government has still done nothing since the last war, to eliminate the basic causes that are certain to force the United States into the next war.

Existing neutrality policies, as adopted by the last session of Congress, are far from adequate if we, as a nation, sincerely seek to remain neutral when Europe's next free-for-all gets under way. America's present neutrality laws must be strengthened with clearly defined policies that will curb direct or indirect aid to either side involved in the next controversy between nations. We must decide on those legislative provisions now, when such decisions can be made without directly antagonizing those who will be in the greatest need of America's commodities when open warfare actively develops.

The eighteenth anniversary of the signing of the Armistice on November 11th, 1918, holds one significant message for the people of the United States. The eighteen years that have elapsed have proved conclusively that continued peace and

Beware of Rabbits That Are Easy To Shoot Warns IAA

When you go hunting beware of the rabbit that's slow on the get-away. It may have tularemia or rabbit fever, says the Safety Department of the Illinois Agricultural Association.

This disease is spread by rabbits and squirrels although the rabbit tick, wood tick, bedbug and deerfly also carry it. The disease occasionally results in death and almost invariably gives the person stricken a few weeks of high fever, pain and swelling.

Symptoms which appear as a sore accompanied by a sore or ulcer at the place infection entered the body, show up approximately three days after the infection. Medical attention should be sought immediately.

C. M. Seagraves, safety director for the Association, suggests the following rules to lessen exposure to the disease:

1. Don't pick up a lazy rabbit. Cover it up at the place it was shot.
2. If there are any scratches on cuts on your hands don't clean rabbits.
3. Wash hands carefully immediately after handling a rabbit. Thorough cooking destroys "rabbit fever."
4. Be safe by wearing rubber or canvas gloves when handling and cleaning rabbits.

The doughty old Earl of Sandwich was responsible for this modern method of gulping down a hasty meal. An incurable gambler, he ordered his butler to deliver a slice of ham and two pieces of bread to him one night as he sat at the roulette table. Preoccupied, he absent-mindedly slapped the meat between the slices of bread... and behold, a sandwich!

NUTS AND DOLTS

"Yessir! We'll All Be A-Flyin' Soon"

Attention, drivers! Let's talk about inattention. High on the list of traffic sinners is the man whose eyes wander all over the landscape when they should be on the road ahead and whose mind, if any, is always on vacation from the business of driving. Not only does he risk his own life, and the lives of his wife and kiddies, but he is also a menace to every other driver on the road.

Travelers Insurance Company statistics show that 3,400 persons were killed last year when motorists drove off the roadway. Another 4,000 met death when they got over on the wrong side of the road. Most accidents of that type wouldn't happen to alert drivers.

Enlist today in the ranks of Safe Drivers. Eyes Front! Attention!

In many states special committees have been appointed by the governors to study the traffic conditions. This is commendable.

Out of these studies and deliberations will come recommendations that will apply to each and every community in the states involved. There should be more of these studies made. Many conditions on our highways today are serious causes of accidents and, unless careful studies are made, will never come to light.

It is recommended that every community receiving these reports help the committee as much as possible in bringing to the front serious conditions in that community. There is not a community anywhere that does not have a traffic problem. These problems should be discussed freely and recommendations made to the committee so that action can be taken by the main committee. Get behind this movement, and support it.

It is interesting to note that Wm.

and Bernice are sophomores and Arthur is a freshman.

In a General Science Objective Test on Unit II, the students who received the highest marks were:

Billy Elkin, Sherman Knox and Warren Townsend.

REPORT CARDS

The new report cards were recently given out to both the high and grade schools. This year they will be issued six times to high school students and five times to grade school students. The cards have been designed with modern progressive principles in mind and it is felt that they will serve their purpose much better than the old ones.

The report is divided into three parts: PART I—Scholarship. PART II—Citizenship and PART III—Library reading.

Part I contains the usual grades in subjects pursued.

Part II contains grades in Citizenship. The personality traits graded are: Co-operation with Teacher, Courtesy with pupils, work spirit, neatness, dependability, attentiveness and promptness. The school is primarily an institution for the training of future American citizens and it certainly seems advisable to call attention to those traits which make for good citizenship. Parents and students should pay particular attention to these grades. They are given with the thought in mind of helping students to understand in which of these important traits they are weak.

Part III grades the pupil on his or her interest in library reading. We are trying to stimulate an interest and a desire on the pupil's part to use books for pleasure and profit. Books are 'friends in need' and boys and girls should acquire the habit and ability to use them as early in life as possible.

Breeders to Stage Largest Stock Show

At the 37th International Live Stock Exposition, November 28 to December 5, leading stockman and farmers of North America will join those of distant lands in staging the largest exhibition of purebred herds prime market animals, and farm crops ever seen in the United States.

The exposition will be held at the Chicago Stock Yards in the new amphitheater and pens completed less than two years ago as a permanent home for the show.

Its main arena, surrounded by 7,500 seats, will be the setting for such headline events in agricultural affairs as the selection of the International grand champion steer; the naming of the winners in the various breeds of beef cattle and draft horses that represent the source of improvement for the major part of America's beef supply and its farm power.

The Junior Live Stock Feeding Contest, in which hundreds of farm boys and girls exhibit their prize winning stock from county and state fair competitions; the Junior Live Stock Judging Contest, participated in by farm youngsters from many states; the Collegiate Live Stock Judging Contest, in which students

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A DEN OF ROBBERS

WHEN Billy Mink started to explore the big barn in the farmyard where he had decided to stay for a while he didn't know that he was entering a den of robbers. But that is what he was doing. Yes, sir, that is just what he was doing. You see, that barn was the home of ever and ever so many of the tribe of Robber the Rat, and each one of them, big and little, was a robber. They lived by robbery, which, you know, is another name for stealing.

Now those robbers had lived in that big barn so long that they had come to look on it as belonging to them. They knew every nook and corner and cranny in it and under it. The farmer who owned it had tried his best to drive them away. But those robber rats simply laughed at all his efforts. They were smart. Oh, yes, indeed, they were smart. Robbers often are quite as smart as honest people. They were too smart for that farmer.

All those rats belonged to the Brown Rat tribe. Not that they were all brown. The fact is, the older ones were quite gray. But that was because they were old and had grown gray with age.

Not all rats are bad. There are Brushtail the Wood Rat and Miser the Trade Rat and their families. They are honest and respected by their neighbors. But all the Brown tribe are outcasts, despised by all the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, and hated by man. There is no good in them. They become robbers as soon as they can run about, and they remain robbers as long as they live.

Caracul and Marten

Black caracul is slimly fitted and widely flared in this handsome coat for afternoon wear. It is lavishly trimmed with sable dyed baume marten. The little toque combines the same two furs.

There is not an honest hair on one of them. They hate the sunlight, for their deeds are deeds of darkness. They are savage.

But with all this, they are clever, very clever indeed. They are so clever that in spite of all man's efforts to kill them their tribe has increased until it is probably the largest tribe of little people who wear fur in all the world, excepting the Mouse tribe.

The farmer who owned that barn had set traps of many kinds, but the wise old leader of the rats had found each trap and warned all his relatives. The farmer had tried to poison them, but somehow their wise old leader always knew where the poison was and warned them against it. A cat had been brought to catch them, but the tough old fighters among the rats had driven the cat out.

So, the rats had increased and the greater the numbers the more they

HINTS ON FOODS

THE preparation of a leftover into something appetizing takes vastly more thought than to produce an ordinary dish, which is one of the reasons why such dishes are not acceptable; they are prepared with too little thought.

There is something out of balance with a person who cannot enjoy with a thrill, crisp, well-blended salads, or well-cooked and seasoned vegetables; but no one can be blamed for refusing unattractive food. Because the male members of the family shy at anything reheated, made over, or reheated, the problem of carefully conserving good foods and giving them back in an acceptable form is one which takes more finesse than a hand of bridge.

One reason that many men balk at salads is because they have been often used as a clearing house for leftovers.

Children will learn to like almost any kind of vegetable if it is not discussed pro and con every time it appears. Children are people, and when we learn to respect their feelings as we would older ones, they will respond accordingly, usually.

When teaching a child to eat a new dish, make it as attractive as possible in appearance and so tasty that it will not disappoint, and you will never have to urge the food upon an unwilling child.

Children need whole wheat; other cereals may be used for variety. They need fat—butterfat is the best of all fats to promote growth. The child needs milk, at least a quart a stole. They gnawed holes wherever there was a chance of getting food. They got into the farmer's house and did great damage there. In the spring they killed young chickens in the henhouse. They stole eggs. In fact, these robbers did about as they pleased and the big barn was their den.

day in some form; sugar in moderate amount and candy after a meal or between meals so that it will not destroy his appetite for the coming meal. Plenty of fruit and fresh vegetables are needed in all diets, and especially in the child's.

Another food that a well-nourished child needs is fresh eggs; serve one in some form each day for each child. Well-cooked rice, fresh fish, poultry, are all good foods for the growing child.

WORK YOUR GARDEN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

UNLESS you work your garden
You can't expect a rose,
The poorest little pansy flow'r,
Or anything that grows.
Unless you work a little
But little you will win,
For all that's worth the having comes

To those who toil and spin.

Unless you work your garden
You can't expect the joy
Of those who grow the growing things
That busy hands employ.
Unless you give a little
But little will be yours,
Although you live a life of ease,
But little that endures.

Unless you work your garden
You can't expect to reap
The things that are the beautiful,
Or friends that you can keep.
Unless you love a little
And kindly say and do,
The rose of life will be for some,
The weeds of life for you.

THE LANGUAGE
OF YOUR HANDBy Leicester K. Davis
© Public Ledger, Inc.

HOW often you meet interesting people, socially or in business, whose true traits and character you would give almost anything to see delineated. This isn't difficult if you are on speaking terms with the language of the hand. But before you attempt a verdict, be sure that you are familiar with the characteristics of type.

The Temperamental Type of Hand
Graceful symmetry is the outstanding feature of this type. The fingers, particularly, impress the observer with their smoothness and delicate modeling from root to nail tip. Hands of the temperamental type are in general quite small, though there may be exceptions to the rule; are plump but not over-fleshed and have a responsive, resilient feel when grasped.

The fingers of this type are of moderate length in proportion to the length of palm, which is usually neither square nor elongated, but rather full and oval in shape. The thumb, like the fingers, is well proportioned, of moderate length, and in many instances has a markedly tapered nail joint, with the joint below it of unusual slenderness and sometimes corseted in appearance.

The firm hand of temperamental type indicates the emotional, dramatically inclined, artistic man or woman, with far greater endowments along these lines than average. But if overfleshed, the indications are that indolence and love of ease will be serious drawbacks to emotional and artistic expression.

Possessors of the temperamental type of hand are natural artists and actors, who, although they may never follow their natural inclinations, nevertheless are only truly happy when in an artistic or "dramatic" environment.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington—I have been wondering whether the rank and file of the American citizens have been able to piece together the many loose ends of the distressing conditions extant throughout the world. It is to be recognized, of course, that when a man like Dictator Stalin of Russia makes a statement that war in Europe is just ahead, it awakens the peoples of the world with a sudden start. That is the spectacular side. But there is much more about European political conditions than is disclosed in the Stalin declaration.

The thing that students and observers of European affairs can see in conditions abroad, as they view them in the light of our own State Department's information, is that a gigantic battle is on between two schools of thought. On the one hand is communism. On the other hand, and just as firmly entrenched and as deeply determined, is fascism. Followers of these two lines of thought are both literally and figuratively at each other's throat, and the picture when pieced together, can lead to no other conclusion than that which Stalin foresees, namely, war.

I have lately heard some observers make the statement that the Spanish rebellion is the crux of the problem. I cannot agree with that. Spain and her revolution may prove to be the spark that ignites the European powder keg, but Spain and her revolution are just incidents in the developments that came originally from the overthrow of the Czar's government in Russia and the establishment for the first time of a commune of the proletariat in the world.

It was unfortunate for the world and for those people who wanted to promote peace at all times that the Versailles treaty had to take shape as it did. The Versailles treaty subjugated Germany beyond all reason. I think that will be accepted by all save the most violent partisans of the late President Wilson. It seems to me, however, that the Versailles treaty has proved to be the second stage in the chain of circumstances that led to Mussolini in Italy, Hitler in Germany, overthrow of the royalists in Spain, and lately the election of a "people's front" in France.

Any analysis of that chain of circumstances cannot fail to include the effect the Versailles treaty had upon European conditions. In some ways, the effect was direct; in others, it was indirect, and the full import of the treaty provisions were not evident until eight or ten or even twelve years after the four great powers had made that treaty effective and, they believed, effectually disarmed and bottled up Germany.

After many conversations with diplomats, foreign students and Washington government officials, I believe too much importance cannot be attached to the attempt made by the Versailles treaty to break up political jurisdictions. The treaty, it will be remembered, created a vast number of insignificant and rather helpless states in Europe. They were supposed to serve as a buffer between the larger nations and prevent snarling and making faces among those world powers that had engaged in the last war. The effect, it has now been proved, is exactly the opposite.

Throughout Europe, according to the official and unofficial word that I get, there is a new kind of hatred among nations. It is not the hatred that obtained between France and Germany under Kaiser Wilhelm. It is a hatred not between the statesmen of the various countries, but among the rank and file of the people. That is to say, it is a vengeful feeling and when that is understood, it is not difficult to realize how vicious the undercurrent of relations is from Russia on the north to the Straits of Gibraltar, or even into Africa on the south.

To bring this condition into today's light, one hardly need look further than the various cabled dispatches from European capitals, each telling a story how the respective governments are watching the Spanish revolution. Again, the Russian Stalin puts the thing into a spectacular relief. If reports can be accredited, and official information indicates that they can be regarded as having a basis of fact, Stalin is ready to lend assistance to the so-called loyalist armies in Spain.

Now the loyalist armies, representing the government that is barely holding on by the skin of its teeth, are wholly communistic. Hence, Stalin's interest.

But the Russian dictator might be regarded as horning into a mess that does not concern his nation, except for another and most important piece of information. That information, not officially confirmed but generally believed, is to the effect that Italy's Mussolini has a finger in the pie on the fascist side of the Spanish revolution. The rebel armies in Spain are fascists. Hence it is quite understandable how the Italian dictator may be mixed up in promoting, even extending military assistance, to the rebel Spaniards. Thus we have definitely a triangle that surrounds the peoples of Europe. Within the boundaries of that triangle are jealousies unparalleled, political propaganda of a sort never before unleashed on the world, and millions upon millions of people who may be classed as unthinking. They are of a type comparable to the lowest grade of American individuals who, while not wholly illiterate, cannot be accredited with the power to reason. They are being led into the very jaws of another war by wholly unscrupulous and unprincipled agitators who are posing as the friend of the common man. They are working on fertile ground.

Repeatedly, I hear questions asked concerning whether the United States is likely to get involved in that bottomless pit of Europe and, a kindred question, whether communism and fascism are gaining in the United States. The answer to the first half of that question must be made in two ways. We are likely to get involved unless some of our government policies are changed. But we can stay out if those policies do undergo revision. Whether we find ourselves embroiled in that horrible mess, depends entirely on the Washington government and the attitude of the Washington government appears entirely upon the attitude of the American people.

And that statement brings me to the most important observation that I have to make in connection with this discussion. It is now a definite fact that communists are spreading their propaganda through the United States in an effort to create a war spirit. It is the beginning of their movement to drag us into another world war and if we get in, it means the end of the American nation, as the land of freedom for us all. Our economic structure, as well as our government, will be destroyed. I have no hesitancy in making such a statement.

After the World war it took us twenty years to recognize what the cost of that war was. I mean the cost of disturbed lives more than I refer to money cost. The depression resulted from that war just as surely as the sun shines, and we are all now getting well fed up with this depression. And so I say on the basis of conclusions given me from countless authoritative sources, we cannot stand another war of the proportions of the World war and retain our government in its present form, our traditions, our institutions. There will be no preventing such a breakdown.

As I have said in these columns before, one particular criticism that I have against the Roosevelt administration is its capitulation to Russia.

Frankly, I believe Mr. Roosevelt was trapped. I believe he saw too late what the full meaning of his action was when he recognized Russia—that is, recognized his mistake too late unless he believes in the doctrine of the communists. In any event, it is my firm conviction that the recognition of the Soviet opened the door through which now are marching hordes of men and women squint-eyed, unprincipled in character, unpronounceable names, ruthless in design. They are bringing the propaganda which I mentioned. This is not intended to be a scare story. The evidence of communistic propaganda probably is all about you in your own communities. It is subtle, cleverly handled. Sometimes, it is even very boldly done. For example, in many of the larger cities today, handbills in appearance like those that are used announcing a public sale, are finding their way into the playgrounds of public schools. Allegedly brilliant lecturers are going about the country making what appear to be educational addresses, but containing, in many instances, propaganda argument in support of the communistic theory.

There are many other types of this propaganda under way. Professor Rexford Guy Tugwell published a text book on government a few years ago and he has succeeded in getting that volume into the special list of books for Delaware schools. It contains declarations definitely opposed to the American form of government.

It is unnecessary to point out more of these things. The point is quite definite and clear. The movement toward communism in this country is proceeding slowly, cautiously, because the communistic leaders recognize American sentiment must be changed slowly, but the slimy head of the snake is coming out of the water and it will be much bolder if we become involved in the European struggle. Communists would make of us American citizens each and every one a communist and would throw us into the world struggle on the side of communism and against fascism.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Paul Preached in a Schoolhouse.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Gospel Facing the Forces of Evil.

War, war! The whole world is war-conscious in our day. Nations are watching one another with suspicion, and in the meantime arming themselves for conflict. Hatred and suspicion are rife, and as long as sin rules the hearts of men we long in vain for peace, which cannot come until that day when the Prince of Peace himself shall reign.

Yet every Christian hopes and works for the peaceful solution of the nations' problems. Right thinking men do not want war between the peoples of the earth. But there is one warfare that we do seek to foster and promote. We encourage it, and as Christians make a holy resolve to battle to the end. That is the warfare against Satan and his hosts. As long as he rules in the hearts of men, and sin and wickedness are here, we say, "Fight on, my soul."

Christian life and service are presented in Scripture as a fight, and we do well to learn the methods and the weapons of this great spiritual conflict, not stressing a belligerent note of strife against one another, and particularly not between the divisions of God's army in the earth, but standing shoulder to shoulder in the battle against the Evil One.

Our lesson presents a picture of I. The Lord's Warrior (Acts 19:8-12).

Paul, who is now on his third missionary journey, comes again to Ephesus, the leading city of Asia Minor, and the center of the worship of the heathen goddess, Diana. He tarries there for about three years.

Like a good tactician he began his campaign at a strategic point, the synagogue. He brought forward his God-given weapons, "reasoning and persuading." Some he won, others disbelieved—the sad fact which even this greatest of all preachers had to meet.

God attested his work by miracles. The soldier of the Lord does not go into battle alone. Nor does he fight in his own power. God gave him

II. A Mighty Conquest (vv. 18-20).

When a man's profession of faith in Christ carries with it an open forsaking of his confessed misdeeds—a true change of life as well as a declaration of belief—there has been real dealing with God.

Notice, that they burned the bad books found in their homes, even though they were valued at thousands of dollars. Christian, how many books or magazines are there in your home now that minister only to the lowest in your nature? Oh, yes, they may be "literature," they may be in beautiful bindings; you may even read them "in the original," and regard the reading as cultural. But if they are bad books, are you ready to follow the Ephesians in destroying them?

Finally we have from Paul's letter to the Ephesians the glorious presentation of the Christian's

III. God-Given Weapons (Eph. 6:13-20).

This is a familiar, but none the less rich and instructive, passage. We have space to note only that there are (1) five weapons of defense; namely, the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shoes of peace, the shield of faith, and the helmet of salvation, and (2) one mighty weapon of offense, the sword of the Spirit—the Word of God. A glorious and impenetrable armor and equipment for battle!

But it will do us not the slightest good unless we obey Paul's admonition and put it on.

Christian, are you wearing and using "the whole armor of God"?

Judging From Appearance

Men in general judge more from appearance than from reality. All men have eyes, but few have the gift of penetration.—Macchiavelli.

God's Way

The strength and the happiness of a man consists in finding out the way in which God is going, and going in that way, too.

Acts That Bring Results

No act falls fruitless; none can tell how vast its power may be; nor what results, unfolded, dwell within it silently.—Bulwer.

A Friend Indeed

Keep close to thy Best Friend, and He will refresh and cheer thee.—Spurgeon.

God's Holiness

We must not only bless God for all his benefits; we must rejoice in his holiness.—McIntyre.

Wives, Know Yourself!—

Accurate Analysis Will Do Much to Overcome Difficulty in Wedded Life

SPEAKING on the question of trial marriages, a well known writer said, "There should be no need for trial when two people know their own abilities and have measured themselves accurately. Two people who understand themselves will never, I believe, have any difficulty living happily together after marriage."

That is a new slant on the question of success in marriage, supplements a woman writer of national fame. Not "Know thy husband"—or "wife," but "know thyself!"

And, come to think of it, isn't most of the discontent and dissatisfaction in marriage traceable to ideas of ourselves—that may be misconceptions, no less than our illusions about the other person?

How many women's dissatisfaction with their husband has as its source the thought of all they gave up to marry him, all they "might have had" if they had married a certain other man?

How many women's discontent with the role of wife and mother springs from the thought of how much more fascinating pastimes they might have had if they had followed that career?

How many girl's impossible expectations of a fulltime lover and Prince Charming originates in an exaggerated notion of their own devastating beauty and charm?

If all discontented wives would look deeply unto themselves, measure themselves, stop fooling themselves, many might discover that the other man they might have married is a self-nurtured illusion; that the career of their dreams is not a soft snap and a joy forever; but a grueling, exhausting job which might have worn them out if they had qualified for it, which they probably would have been unable to do; that they themselves are neither devastating beauties nor always charming, but women who are frequently disappointing and difficult to live with. They might discover and admit to themselves that they are greatly in debt to their husbands for many things that make life easier and better and more worthwhile—that they would not get along so well without them.

Then they might think more of doing their part of trying to make those husbands happy. And that effort on the part of one must inevitably go a long way toward a mutually happy and successful marriage.
